Lt. Gen. William B. Caldwell IV (left) speaks with Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey and U.S. Air Force Brig. Gen. Michael Cunniff at the Regional Operations and Intelligence Center at the State Police Headquarters in Trenton, N.J. Nov. 3. Caldwell spoke with them about the Department of Defense's partnership with the Federal Emergency Management Agency in the "whole of government" response to Hurricane Sandy. Caldwell visited the site to meet with Col. Barrett Holmes to discuss the state's emerging needs, which may require Department of Defense assistance. Caldwell is the commanding general of U.S. Army North and senior commander, Fort Sam Houston and Camp Bullis. Holmes is the defense coordinating officer for Army North's Region IV Defense Coordinating Element. Cunniff is the New Jersey adjutant general.

In one of the costliest and most devastating storms to strike the United States, Super Storm Sandy pummeled the country's Eastern seaboard Oct. 29, leaving behind it a swath of destruction, widespread power outages, flooding and gas shortages in her wake.

As the scope of the storm's devastation began to unfold, U.S. Army North prepositioned coordinating elements in the most devastated areas to help support local, state and federal response efforts.

"It is our hope and our feeling that when they see a uniform that they'll get a sense of calm and confidence that someone is there who wants to help them out," said Lt. Col. Michael Brough, Combined Operations and Integration Center team leader, Army North.

Army North, as the Joint Force Land Component

Command of U.S. Northern Command, activated Joint Task Force – Civil Support, headquartered at Joint Base Langley-Eustis, Va., to serve as the JFLCC Coordinating Element at Joint Base McGuire-Dix-Lakehurst, N.J. The unit's mission is to coordinate for military units conducting missions in affected regions of the Eastern seaboard.

After tracking the storm for more than a week, Army North deployed six of its 10 defense coordinating elements – which are co-located with the Federal Emergency Management Agency's regional headquarters throughout the nation – to Trenton, N.J.; Charleston, W.Va.; Philadelphia; Maynard, Mass.; Brooklyn and New York City to coordinate Department of Defense support to the FEMA and other response elements.

The defense coordinating elements, led by a defense coordinating officer, have the ability to coordinate requests for DOD to assist in search and rescue missions, medical evacuations, aerial damage assessments, distribution of food, water and blankets, establish temporary shelters, provide generators and pumps, provide communication equipment, transportation capabilities and many other functions to support disaster relief efforts.

For those in the JFLCC Coordination Element, managing the large influx of DOD forces into New York, New Jersey and other affected states is an important task.

U.S. Southern Command and U.S. Army South personnel escorted the commanding general of Colombian military forces and a delegation of public and private Colombian leaders as they visited the Center for the Intrepid, the Fisher House Foundation and the Warrior and Family Support Center Oct. 24 and 25.

The two-day visit was designed to highlight the value of the Center for the Intrepid in treating our wounded warriors and to allow the delegation to gain an understanding of the role the U.S. private sector plays in supporting and caring for our wounded warriors, said Col. Jaime Henry, a Colombian foreign liaison officer assigned to U.S. Army South.

Air Force Gen. Douglas Fraser, the commander of U.S. Southern Command, accompanied Gen. Alejandro Navas, the commanding general of Colombian military forces, and approximately 10 other public and private sector leaders as they toured the facilities and attended briefings by staff members.

"This visit will afford us an opportunity to share with our guest delegation what we've learned from partnering with organizations like Intrepid Fallen Heroes Fund and Fisher House Foundation in caring

Every picture tells a story

By Brig. Gen. Theresa C. Carter

"You've walked past them many times, don't think you've really looked at them... eyes full of hope. They whisper their legacy to you. Listen, do you hear it? Carpe Diem, seize the day boys, make your lives extraordinary."

I often think about that scene when I look at photographs of our veterans and the men and women currently serving in uniform. I try to imagine what they were thinking when the photo was snapped. Was it the sheer joy and pride of becoming a Soldier, Sailor, Airman or Marine upon graduating from basic training or earning a commission? Was it the anguish and heartache of losing a buddy in a fierce firefight on a battlefield far from home? Or was it humility in receiving a decoration for bravery and courage under fire when they felt they were just doing their job?

As I write this, I can see a photograph sitting on my fireplace mantel.

The photo is of my grandfather, Corporal Michael Carter, wearing the uniform of a signal corps soldier, a member of the Headquarters Company, 361st Infantry,

Corporal Michael Carter

91st Division. On his uniform there is a single medal, and he looks a bit uncomfortable posing for the camera. I never met him as he passed away over 13 years before I was born.

My dad, a Purple Heart recipient from his service as a Machinists Mate Second Class on the USS Essex in World War II, never talked much about what either of them did during their military service.

A few years ago, sourcing from old newspaper articles, my aunt posted information about my grandfather on the Los Angeles Fire Department website. (He was captain of Engine Company 27.) It was then that I learned more about the medal on his uniform, the Distinguished Service Cross, which he earned Sept. 28, 1918 in the Battle of the Argonne.

One article from the local paper in Bakersfield, Calif., shared this account:

"After much investigation by newspaper reporters and friends it was finally developed that Carter did earn the cross of honor stowed away in his mess kit, and the story of his actions which won the cross leaked out. During a heavy enemy barrage in the battle of the Argonne, a high explosive shell broke the line of communication between headquarters and outposts, Carter, observing the break in the line dashed out, in the face of the terrible barrage, and, without receiving a scratch repaired the wire. Carter seems to be of a modest position, as he returned to Bakersfield and assumed the position as engineer at the Mercy hospital without mention of his experiences in the war."

I share that story not to boast about my grandfather, though I am obviously very proud of him, but rather to say his reluctance to share his experience is very common among our veterans.

Yet their stories need to be told, not only to inspire the next generation

Veterans Day: The Last Formation

By Lt. Col. Zoltan L. Krompcher Commander, Headquarters and Headquarters Battalion,
U.S. Army North

Underneath the canopy of the Texas sky is a place dotted with stones, a special place where generals rest next to sergeants who lie beside privates, all heroes taking part in a final formation. This is the Fort Sam Houston National Cemetery.

I once read that "a veteran is one who wrote a blank check to America, payable with one's life."

This diverse cast of men and women are cut from the same cloth because they once volunteered to serve the Nation, some during peace, others in places which mark our past with conflict, like mile markers tracing a journey.

Regardless of when or where they served, make no mistake that every veteran has sacrificed in cutting a path to the country's future. And so it is that we in uniform honor them to the very end.

Since 1926, the Fort Sam Houston National Cemetery has been a place where those who served can rest in final repose with their brothers and sisters.

Headstones mark notables like Maj. Gen. Homer D. Smith (last person to leave Vietnam); Maj. Gen. Mary E. Clarke (the last Women's Army Corps general) and Medal of Honor recipients Chief Warrant Officer 4 Louis R. Rocco and Master Sgt. Roy P. Benavidez.

Some burials are large, while others have no one to offer a goodbye, other than the Soldiers in attendance. But rank is immaterial when honoring our own. Last month, Lt. Col. Mike de la Pena, a Green Beret, was buried within weeks of Privates James Alvin Tomes and Eddie Jasek.

In addition to the Soldiers from Joint Base San Antonio-Fort Sam Houston, members of the Memorial Services Detachment, an all-volunteer force of veterans, render honors. They come willingly, because the epitaphs are threads in our national fabric.

Staff Sgt. Mark Davenport served two tours as a combat medic in Iraq and now serves in the JBSA-Fort Sam Houston Honor Guard. He told me the first funeral he honored was a Soldier killed in Afghanistan.

"It was amazing. People lined the streets," Davenport said. "The Patriot Guard and local police escorted the hearse. The whole town turned out."

"You know, I took care of a lot of Soldiers in Iraq, and had friends die over there. Providing a last measure of respect for service members and their families is rewarding for all of us."

Veterans connect with those they honor, and so we stand – in the sun, rain or cold – to fare them well on their

Army South top NCO relinquishes duties, CSM ready to serve Army South team

Command Sgt. Maj. Gabriel Cervantes relinquished his duties as U.S. Army South's top noncommissioned officer to Command Sgt. Maj. Dennis Zavodsky during a change of responsibility ceremony outside the Army South Headquarters building Nov. 2.

The ceremony, which is highlighted by the passing of the NCO sword, is a formal relinquishing of responsibilities between two sergeants major.

"This is a ceremony that celebrates the non-commissioned officer," said Maj. Gen. Frederick Rudesheim, Army South commanding general. "It is a tangible expression of the passing of the responsibilities from one sergeant major to another."

units carries out policies and ensures standards are maintained in the performance, training, appearance and conduct of enlisted personnel. The command sergeant major advises and initiates recommendations to the commander and staff in matters pertaining to the local NCO support channel and the discipline of Soldiers.

Cervantes, who has served as the standard bearer for Army South during the last three years, spoke favorably about his time at Army South.

"Time has really flown by," said Cervantes, whose next assignment will take him to Afghanistan. "I was honored to be assigned here and work with everyone."

Over the past three years since Cervantes' arrival, the role of Army South changed to a deployable force, with support focused on humanitarian assistance and disaster relief. This was no more evident than when the headquarters deployed to Haiti following the 2010 earthquake.

"The Army asked us to train to be able to 'pick up' the headquarters and deploy in support of contingency operations," he said. "Two months after I arrived here the devastating earthquake hit Haiti. I can tell you that it was an honor and a privilege to be a part of that because contingency operations are no-fail missions."

Zavodsky, who is now tasked to be the senior enlisted advisor for the command, said he looks forward to working with and leading all those at Army South going forward. He also took a few minutes to thank his new boss and old friend Cervantes.

Remember the veterans in your life

By Lori Newman
JBSA-FSH News Leader

Growing up in the Midwest, I never thought too much about the military or what it meant to be a service member.

I knew my dad was a World War II veteran and he seemed to tell the same war stories, over and over again, when I was young.

Later on, I married a Vietnam veteran, but my husband never really talks about his time in the military.

It wasn't until my dad nurse came to his home to help him in his final days, that the meaning of his service and sacrifice to his country really hit home.

The hospice nurse got down on his knees and thanked my dad for his service to our nation. It brought tears to my eyes then as it does today just thinking back to that moment.

Twelve years ago, shortly after my father passed away, my husband and I moved to San Antonio.

It wasn't until we started to understand what military service was all about.

Now, working at Joint Base San Antonio, surrounded by Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen and Marines on a daily basis, I really do have a much greater appreciation for their commitment to honor, protect and serve this great nation.

During the past 11 years, service members have faced multiple deployments. Many suffer from the invisible wounds of war such as post traumatic stress injured and some have lost their lives.

This Veterans Day, I will reflect on all the service members I have had the privilege of meeting over these past years here on JBSA-Fort Sam Houston as well as their families.

I have come to realize that behind every service member is a family – whether it's a spouse, mother, father, children or aunt and uncle.

Family members sacrifice so much – time with their loved one, frequent moves, ad-

Some families make the ultimate sacrifice, losing someone they love.

This Veterans Day, remember to thank the service members in your life, whether they're your relative, friend, neighbor or someone in uniform ahead of you in the checkout line at the supermarket.

I'm sure they will appreciate the acknowledgement, just as my father did years ago.

“Thanks to this partnership, the Center for the Intrepid has helped more than 780 wounded warriors make remarkable recoveries to remain on active duty or return to civilian life. Silveira said it’s important to share ideas, knowledge and experiences with committed partner nation militaries such as Colombia in order to find effective solutions to common problems.

“Almost 13,000 Colombian soldiers have been wounded by IEDs since 1996,” said Silveira. “With this visit, we hope to help them get one step closer to realizing their vision of a center fully dedicated to caring, treating and rehabilitating military members who are seriously injured while defending the nation.

Through continued engagement and collaboration in this area, we also hope to ensure we can capitalize on the synergies and interoperability of our centers for the good of the patients they care for.”

Wounded warriors cast lines for fish, catch memories

By Clayton Church
U.S. Army Corps of Engineers

For most people, going fishing on a weekend morning isn't that big of a deal. After a tough work week, going out on a lake with friends and family provides a nice break from being at the office or in the field.

But for a wounded warrior, it's a break from hospitals, doctors and rigorous physical therapy.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers at Grapevine and Canyon Lakes hosted "Take A Warrior Fishing" events Oct. 20, providing 56 warriors and 42 family members a respite from their daily routines with a day on a lake fishing and enjoying the scenic views.

"We had great turn-outs at both events," said Cheryl Jasper, event project manager and Fort Worth District natural resource specialist. "Our warriors and their families were taken out by volunteer boat captains for a fun morning of fishing, then lunch provided by our sponsors."

Established in 2011, the "Take a Warrior Fishing" program is designed to support military personnel and their families, specifically targeting persons assigned to warrior transition commands, by creating an adaptive community-based outdoor recreation experience through the sport of fishing.

The main goals of this program are to restore well-being by increasing family interaction, encouraging outdoor recreation, and supporting positive, social interactions that help transitioning service members rebuild connections with the civilian world.

journey. Looking at the names etched in stone, I can't help but wonder if some of these men served with my grandfather in the Battle of the Bulge, or with my wife's uncles.

This is a cemetery, yes. But it is also where the living share moments, exchange knowing looks and remember. A place where horses, big as life, carry those who once stood proud and, yes, seemed bigger than life in their own time.

When the sharp crack of rifles pierce the air, we can't help but imagine the final scenes of a veteran's life on a distant piece of ground, a moment when comrades become best friends. Or reflect on those who returned and made America proud.

When the flag is folded, the veterans in the group stand a little taller when snapping a perfect salute.

And no one is immune when the notes of "Taps" waft across the field, like a gentle breeze, a signal that the world has lost a warrior who now lays with brothers and sisters in a field of white stone. Never wavering, with no one out of place. A perfect formation.

In that lingering moment when we lower them into the ground, we elevate and salute them a final time and a new generation of Soldiers takes the guidon.

Bryant and Moskowitz took home $250 and $100, respectively. The 559th Medical Operations Squadron won the $300 spirit award for having the best representation at the event in spirit and number.

Audience members competed for an award of their own, with the loudest and proudest representation from a unit taking home $300.

"I am so excited," Cummings said. "I can think of a lot of things to spend this prize money on."

A video of Cummings' winning performance will be submitted for competition with the worldwide Operation Rising Star winners.

Twelve contestants will be selected for the finals Dec. 8, 10, 12, 14 and 15 at 7 p.m. each night at the Fort Sam Houston Theatre. The 2012 grand prize winner receives $1,000 and a trip for two to Los Angeles for a professional recording studio experience, which is valued at $18,000.

Judges included Deborah Seabron, chief of the 502nd Mission Support Group Commander's Action Group; James Walker, CEO of James Walker Productions and Tyree Robinson, an award-winning set designer, stage lighting and sound technician.

Army Medicine fields secure messaging service to patients

By Kirk Frady
Army Medical Command
Public Affairs

Beneficiaries of Army Medicine will soon be able to communicate on-line with their primary care provider through secure messaging.

The U.S. Army Medical Command is implementing the use of Army Medicine Secure Messaging Service by offering it to 100 percent of beneficiaries who receive care in the “direct care” system by the end of 2014.

Secure messaging is a commercial, web-based, platform that provides a robust set of services designed to allow patients and their healthcare team to communicate securely at times and locations that are convenient.

This secure platform works very much like an on-line secure banking website.

“Army Medicine issued nearly 2,000 AMSMS licenses to healthcare providers at 48 military treatment facilities during Phase 1 in 2012,” said Dr. Terry Newton M.D., information technology clinical capability manager.

“Over the next 24 to 36 months, we will complete deployment of over 5,000 additional licenses to primary and specialty care clinics,” Newton added. “Similarly, the other branches of military service are also executing the same secure messaging capability across their treatment facility network.”

This secure messaging capability will, for the first time, provide patients the ability to communicate directly with their provider and care teams and allow care teams a two-way flow of communication with individual patients or groups of patients.

If patients want to know whether or not their primary care provider is using the secure messaging system they should check with their assigned military treatment facility to find out.

Army Medicine’s goal is to provide the secure messaging service to all beneficiaries who receive care in the direct care system by the end of 2014.

In 2013, AMSMS will enter Phase 2 of this project. Delivery will be focused on any primary care facility that did not receive AMSMS in 2012. During Phase 2, secure messaging service delivery will also be expanded to specialty care such as Orthopedics, OB/GYN, etc.

“AMSMS is an easy to use secure communication tool that has the potential to significantly impact care to beneficiaries by engaging them in convenient ways and times to build relationships, improve access to information and reduce the need for so many visits to their primary care clinic,” said Newton, when asked how the secure messaging system will benefit the patient.

“Secure messaging is a critical tool in helping Army Medicine achieve the aim of improving the patient’s experience, improving population health and readiness while reducing per capita costs.”

With online services from Army Medicine Secure Messaging Service, patients will be able to book appointments, request and review lab/test results, request medication refills, request a referral, email their physician a question and schedule web visits with their provider.

In addition, patients will have access to a fully integrated electronic personal health record and a robust set of multi-media educational content through the AMSMS.

To register for online services, beneficiaries should visit with their healthcare team administrator or call their primary care clinic for more details.

but also to document the dedication, courage and sacrifice of all who have worn the nation’s uniform, both in times of peace and war. Their service, no matter how long or under what circumstances, made a difference.

As you pay tribute to and salute our veterans Nov. 11, encourage the veterans in your life to share their stories, to share their legacy with future generations. I have no doubt looking at photographs of their time in service, young men and women will be inspired to seize the day, make a difference and become extraordinary.

Have you ever visited the Post at San Antonio?

By Jacqueline Davis

Acting Director, Fort Sam Houston Museum

Originally established as the Post at San Antonio in 1845, Joint Base San Antonio-Fort Sam Houston celebrated its 167th year of operation Oct. 28.

“The Post Return of San Antonio de Bexar, Texas, for the month of October 1845, commanded by Major T.T. Fauntleroy, 2nd Dragoons,” a monthly report all Army posts submitted, officially established the post and reads: “The command left Camp Polk, Texas, on the 1st and arrived at Austin on the 10th October when Maj. T.T. Fauntleroy assumed command. Left Austin on the 16th and arrived at Camp Bexar (6 miles below San Antonio) on the 20th; left Camp Bexar, on the 28th and arrived at San Antonio same day.”

In the summer of 1845, Texas was an independent republic, having won that independence from Mexico nine years previously.

Texas had potential and Mexico wanted it back. In fact, the Mexican army had tried to re-take the new republic several times.

The Republic of Texas was finding it difficult to turn its territory into a profitable land, capable of supporting itself, especially while fending off continual attacks from Mexico.

So, Texas applied for entry as a state – not a territory – in the United States of America. Mexico told both the U.S. and Texas that it would consider the admission of Texas as a state an act of war.

After fairly lengthy arguments and political wheeling-and-dealing, the U.S. Congress voted to accept Texas as the 28th state July 4, 1845.

While the politicking was going on, American President

The French Building, on Main Plaza, was the Department of Texas Headquarters in the 1870s.

James K. Polk had moved an “Army of Observation” to Fort Jesup, on the border between Texas and Louisiana, in anticipation of the vote.

After the vote, Polk ordered Gen. Zachary Taylor to move his forces into Texas to establish U.S. presence and in light of Mexico’s warning.

Taylor’s re-named “Army of Occupation” moved into coastal areas around Port Lavaca and Corpus Christi, and established a fort on the coastal border, named Fort Texas, later re-named Fort Brown.

However, Texas and Mexico have a very long inland border along the Rio Grande, and Taylor needed to post troops in an area capable of quick response along that border.

Being the largest populated area in the region and having served as a military base for the Spanish, Mexican and Texian forces, the logical spot was San Antonio.

Mexico kept its promise and armed conflict over Texas began in the spring of 1846.

The Post in San Antonio became the primary supply point for General Wool’s “Division of the Center,” leasing the Alamo and grounds around it as its quartermaster depot during the Mexican War.

Other rented buildings served as barracks, quarters and hospital. The Post continued to be reported under different names, such as “Camp Salado near San Antonio;” “Camp Worth and San Antonio.”

Under the Treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo that ended the Mexican War in 1848, the U.S. acquired the Rio Grande boundary for Texas, ownership of California, and a large area comprising New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Utah, and parts of Wyoming and Colorado – almost a million square miles of new territory.

As a result of the treaty and the new acquisitions of land, the little ad-hoc Post at San Antonio gained increased significance, serving as the jumping-off point to these areas. A number of new forts the Army instituted in Texas were all headquartered at the still-unnamed Post at San Antonio.

The Post, along with other U.S. Army assets in Texas, was surrendered to the Confederate forces 1861, but re-gained in 1865, and again occupied rented buildings all over San Antonio.

Finally, in the 1870s, the federal government realized the Army needed a permanent post in the area, and after more politicking, the Army built on land donated by the City of San Antonio.

By 1890, the still-un-named Post at San Antonio housed the Headquarters, Department of Texas, the Quartermaster Depot, 12 companies of troops, quarters for the officers, and a variety of corrals, stables, supply rooms and other support facilities.

Finally on Sept. 11, 1890, the Post at San Antonio got its name: Fort Sam Houston

USAMITC initiates behavioral health kiosks to improve patient care

By Kenneth Blair Hogue
USAMITC Public Affairs

The U.S. Army Medical Information Technology Center recently completed work on a key component to support the Behavioral Health Data Portal initiative.

The BHDP kiosk was designed to improve communication between patients and doctors within Army Medicine at the military treatment facility level.

The BHDP initiative, which involves all of Army Medicine worldwide, came about to improve providers' ability to more rapidly identify Soldiers at risk for behavioral health concerns.

Combined with the BHDP workflow, this initiative more efficiently utilizes the patient and providers' time to put critical information at the providers' fingertips when it's needed.

The BHDP initiative grew out of a best practice from Madigan and Tripler Army Medical Centers, was further refined and is now being deployed in Landstuhl, Germany.

"Prior practice required the patient to fill out personal information on a paper questionnaire about their mental state of health and hand it to the medical technician or corpsman for entry into Medical Operational Data System," said Russell Nagle, USAMITC's lead for the engineering, integration and technology branch in the command's core technology division, and the team lead for the BHDP initiative.

"The perception was that we were possibly not getting the accurate information, because dealing with mental health is a touchy subject," Nagle said.

"We wanted patients to input this information directly into MODS online, without feeling as though someone was looking over their shoulder," Nagle added. "That was the tasking that came to us; to create a product that would ensure patient confidentiality and be used with multiple computing platforms, a tablet, a laptop or a PC, wired or wireless.

"As a bonus, having the answers already input, the doctors can review the answers to the questions immediately, thereby speeding up the process."

These behavioral health kiosks pertain to the mental health community Army-wide, and this process can also help bridge the gap between Army, Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps patients.

But right now, this process is only available to Army Medical Command military patients. The service might be expanded later to include family members and other dependents.

"Dependents and other personnel that may not have common access cards, and the need for the system to be wireless, were two huge challenges that had to be overcome," Nagle said.

"The teams involved in these evolutions did an excellent job in making this project successful. As a result, you can use a tablet, laptop or desktop to complete the online mental health questionnaire in a confidential manner."

FISHING from P6

their stress and concerns behind, and just relax and go fishing," Burger said. "Events like these not only provide opportunities for our military and their families but also are a way for local community members to show their support through sponsorship, donations and as volunteers."

A combined 44 sponsors donated shirts, caps, rods, reels, tackle boxes, tackle, breakfast, sandwiches, cookies, barbecue and trimmings, drinks, boat fuel, goodie bag items, piñatas, pumpkins, candy and more to ensure the event was a memorable one.

"My thanks go out to the Corps of Engineers for being the lead agency for both of the Take a Warrior Fishing event these past two weeks," said Jim Owens, executive director, CAST for Kids.

"Because of their support, and the caring and dedication of their employees, we were able to reach out to our wounded Soldiers and give something back to these warriors who have given so much to us.

"The events could not have been a success if it weren't for the many volunteers who supported the warriors and their families," Owens added.

"The 53 boat captains were essential for getting the participants to the fishing areas and back. In addition, 66 on-shore volunteers provided directions, served food and hosted activities for those not fishing."

"To all of you and your families, this is a way we can say thank you for all you have done and continue to do for our nation," said Air Force Maj. Gen. (Dr.) Byron C. Hepburn, commander, 59th Medical Wing, Wilford Hall Ambulatory Surgical Center, JBSA-Lackland, who spoke at the Canyon Lake event after he helped serve lunch.

Canyon Lake Manager Marcus Schimank said he can't imagine what some of the wounded warriors and their families have to go through on a daily basis.

"Giving them and their families a day of relaxation, fun and camaraderie with fellow warriors that can share their understanding is a great feeling and wonderful to be a part of."

At the end of both events, some caught catfish, some caught bass, some caught some rays of sun and some caught none. But all caught something to recall.

As the son of one warrior put it, "we may not have caught any fish today, but we will take home a lot of great memories."

Fort Sam Houston ISD holds mock elections

By Dr. Melanie Morgan and Lori Fuller
FSHISD

Students in the Fort Sam Houston Independent School District recently practiced democracy in action by voting in a mock election while learning the history of our right to vote prior to the 2012 Presidential election.

As teachers prepared for the mock election, they designed work that was authentic, making schoolwork more like real work, addressing academic rigor through the central question, "Why Vote?"

"The presidential election provided an opportunity for district-wide collaboration and curriculum alignment," said Jayne Hatton, FSHISD associate superintendent.

"Citizenship and civic responsibility are concepts taught in pre-kindergarten through grade 12, with four-year-old students learning about their community and making choices and ending in high school history or government classes that focus on civic responsibility and democracy."

Fort Sam Houston Elementary students had to inquire into the questions and develop their own answers.

To demonstrate what they learned, the elementary students created age appropriate, high-quality products to share with others.

"Students had to work in teams, use technology appropriately, communicate ideas and collect, organize and analyze information to apply their learning," said fifth grade teacher Vanessa Kennedy.

"They were actively engaged in the work and learned so much about the process to elect a candidate for a political position."

Second grade teacher Brandi Guerra set the stage for her class to elect a class president.

Students studied and learned about each candidate for class president and listened to a debate on the issues before casting their votes.

"Showing students they have a voice when it comes to choosing what occurs in our nation is important," Guerra said.

"Preparing for a class election taught the students principals involved in the political process in a manner that was meaningful to the students."

Students were excited to have the chance to make their young voices heard.

"You're really supposed to be 18 to vote," said second grade student Michael Mayhugh. "But, now we're like seven and we get to vote."

Using iPads in voter booths allowed students to cast their votes in privacy. The overall winner of the mock election for Fort Sam Houston Elementary School was Barack Obama, although Mitt Romney was the winner by a narrow margin in fifth grade.

Robert G. Cole Middle and High School students engaged in challenging and meaningful work using design qualities and strategies to create projects about the election process and civic responsibility.

Students in PRIDE, Preparing Individuals to Develop Excellence, classes produced posters, videos, public service announcements or songs and skits to answer this essential question.

The Social Studies department provided an in depth study of the candidates, issues and the importance of voting in a democracy.

U.S. History classes

hosted a gallery walk where students and staff could view marketing materials and World History classes hosted an exciting political rally, complete with position papers and raucous cheering, pep rally style.

"It was neat to experience an actual political rally and to feel the spirit of both parties," said eighth grader Ashleigh Manlapaz. "I found it to be very memorable."

History teacher Max Gorham opened the rally reminding students that civil discourse was a responsible and respectful way to hear opposing viewpoints.

While many students were ready to declare their allegiance to a political candidate, some remained undecided and all were interested to listen to speeches prepared by student candidates.

"The rush of adrenaline I felt while speaking was incredible," said sophomore Mila Kelly. "The energy soaring through the crowd was amazing, there was so much passion."

Middle and High School classes cast their vote on blind ballots where issues were presented without a link to a candidate, resulting in a 55-45 split. When asked to vote by candidate, a 60-40 split was evident.

The winner of the mock election for Cole Middle and High School was Barack Obama.

All the votes were tabulated and included with others across the country as part of Project V.O.T.E., an educational program developed by teachers for the Secretary of State.

Seventh grade student Jamie Marte spoke for many students when she said, "I liked the experience of voting. I felt like even if our votes don't count, our voices were still heard."

"When we reach voting age we will know what we are doing and will be able to use real voter registration cards," said fifth grade student Hannah Bethard.

First grade teacher Patty Schubert uses Balanced Literacy concepts to build background knowledge for the mock election held at Fort Sam Houston Elementary.

Cole JROTC once again achieves 'Gold Star' status

By Cadet 2nd Lt. Lyndsey Emry
Battalion Public Affairs Officer

The Robert G. Cole High School Junior ROTC Battalion scored a 992 out of a possible 1,000 points during their triennial formal inspection at Cole High School Oct. 25.

Only eight points away from perfection, the Cougar Battalion retained their designation as an "Honor Unit with Distinction," the highest JROTC designation.

The inspectors, from the 5th ROTC Brigade headquarters, began their inspection at 7 a.m., inspecting facilities, receiving a formal cadet staff briefing, holding an inspection in ranks, and conducting company and color guard drill and reviewing staff files.

At the 12:30 p.m. debriefing, the assembled leadership of the battalion broke out in cheers when the results were announced.

The recurring comment of that afternoon was "outstanding."

By being designated an HUD, Cole cadets are allowed to wear a gold star on their cadet uniforms for the next three years, signifying their accomplishment.

"Even though we had only a little bit of time to prepare, we all worked hard to prepare for the big day. Our efforts paid off as we retained the gold star," said Cadet Maj. Ruby Gibson, JROTC executive officer. "I am really proud of all the cadets' efforts to make the whole battalion successful."
